

Terms for websites and e-commerce

There are a range of requirements set out in various statutes that affect trading on the internet.

If you look at our site you will find that we have Terms of Website Use, Acceptable Use and Privacy notices. These are there to deal with the statutory provisions that affect us as solicitors, or the advertising of our services on the web.

If you deal with consumers there are a range of statutes that set out information you must supply, when you must supply it, and the penalties if you do not.

If you take orders through your website, or even by telephone, there are distance selling regulations that deal with cooling off periods and the right of the consumer to return goods.

We can provide you with relevant terms for your website, and with advice on complying with the law on distance selling.
